TOP 10 REASONS

Why You Shouldn't Date An Economist

1. Economists may be dangerous. Watch out for their invisible hands!
2. It won't matter what you supply, they will always demand more.
3. They consider selfish behavior the most natural thing in the world.
4. They prefer doing it with models and dummies.
5. Economists habitually deflate everything.
6. They like their love lives like they like their markets: free and open.
7. On average they are pretty mean.
8. And definitely too trendy.
9. They will never be happy with you as you are, they will always want you to grow.
10. They require a lot of stimulus in order to expand.

“Due to the slow down we were forced to tighten our belt and as a result closed two of our production facilities...”

“We have said goodbye to many great employees. Never easy but needed.”

“We are continuing to look at ways to improve our product and our efficiencies.”

THE PICTURE ON THE FRONT OF THE ENCORE IS NOT NEW. It has been around for a long time and has graced this cover several times. It's a picture that always cracked Alex up. We once again find ourselves looking pretty lean and worn out. The last two years have been challenging. After ramping up our production to meet our customers' growth we found ourselves with a nice backlog of work. What we didn't want to notice right away was orders slowing down and our production working through that backlog. We held out hoping that things would come back and we would be ready for a ramp up but that has not happened to date. Mining and the oil business remain flat. Due to the slow down we were forced to tighten our belt and as a result closed two of our production facilities—Independence, Iowa and Las Cruces, New Mexico. Both of these communities embraced our company and went out of their way to help us. We have said goodbye to many great employees. Never easy but needed.

We now move forward with Hibbing, Minnesota and Yankton, South Dakota plants handling North American production. We are continuing to look at ways to improve our product and our efficiencies. It's an exciting time in R&D. We look forward to sharing our efforts with you soon. In the meantime, pick up the phone and give us an order, lead times are great!
